Unruly, Revolutionary Women in Modern European History

Women have played central, if often hidden, roles in all major events in European History. This course will begin with the French Revolution in 1789 and trace the impact women have had in historical events through the Second World War. Women Revolutionaries took up arms to defend France against tyranny (men dressed as women to carry out revolutionary acts). Women build a “cult of domesticity” by demanding suffrage and political rights. Women fought in wars, they worked as nurses, they drove ambulances, and they celebrated and suffered alongside the men in their lives. This class will tell women’s stories as a way to explore the history of modern Europe.

The Historical Jesus: History and Archaeology

The past decades have witnessed many new interpretations about first century A.D. Israel and Palestine of relevance for understanding the life and times of Jesus of Nazareth. This Lifelong University class will introduce you to the historical, archaeological, and literary evidence about Jesus and the early Christians. We will also explore the methods scholars teaching at an institution such as UNI use to understand Jesus’ world, his teachings, and his followers. In this class, we will not only introduce you to the methods archaeologists and historians use to uncover the past, but also new findings of relevance to Jesus and the early Christian Church. I have written many books and articles on Jesus, early Christian history and archaeology, and frequently speak internationally on these topics. This course will include findings from my research and discoveries I have made as a biblical archaeologist. The class is open to anyone and assumes no prior knowledge of Christianity.
